About the Galt House Hotel &

Suites

The history of the Galt House Hotel and Suites begins with the vision of Louisville businessman Al J. Schneider. Schneider grew up as the grandson of German immigrants who, at the age of 24 with an eighth grade education, started a lumber company.

Schneider saw the vision of a Louisville waterfront with parks, living and office space and, in 1969, made the only bid to develop a hotel property on the river in the downtown area. In 1972 he built a 25 story hotel at Fourth Street and named it in honor of Dr. William C. Galt, who opened his home to paying guests visiting Louisville in the early 1800s.

In March 1985, Schneider added the East Tower with 600 suites. The towers helped spur downtown development and convention business, and started the turnaround that has made downtown Louisville a popular convention, meeting and entertainment destination.

Throughout his life, Schneider demonstrated his philanthropy and profound belief in supporting education by reaching out to those in greatest need through his foundation. Upon his passing in 2001 his daughter, Mary Moseley, assumed the leadership of the Al J. Schneider Company, the Galt House Hotel and related properties, including more than 2,200 hotel rooms and 200,000 square feet of meeting and convention space in the Louisville area.

The Galt House Hotel is one of the largest hotels in the tri-state and Southeast with 1,291 rooms including 600 executive suites, more than 50 meeting rooms and 120,000 square feet of convention space; the Galt House features six full service restaurants and lounges, including the new RIVUE and Jockey Silks bourbon bar with one of the largest bourbon collections anywhere.
